Teaching & Learning in times of COVID-19

At Politecnico online teaching even for 2020/2021

4 May 2020

At least until next July all the teaching activities of the Politecnico di Torino – exams and graduations included – will keep being held exclusively online, as experienced in these first months of suspension of in-person activities. The persistent situation of uncertainty due to Covid-19 health emergency, plus the need to plan the Summer exams session (06/15/2020 - 07/25/2020) and graduation period (July 2020) giving to the students a due notice about the exact examination dates, led to today’s decision of the Academic Senate of maintaining the modalities adopted so far. The precise aim is to prevent the transfer of a great number of students who should otherwise be present in the Athenaeum, despite the permanence of the restrictions to the mobility within the national territory and, even more so, from abroad.

Already on February 28th, 2020, the Politecnico, in order to face the health emergency, considered the possibility of implementing video-communication tools for the oral and graduation exams, successively extending the Winter exam session until May 15th, 2020, in order to permit the recovery of the exams that were not yet held.

The remote exam and graduation sessions have been carried out quite regularly, after an initial adjustment phase. As of today, 4,400 oral and written exams were held with professors’ video surveillance or via computer thanks to Exam, a Politecnico/platfor integrated with remote control instruments. The lessons of the second semester were immediately turned into online sessions, allowing the experimentation of new forms of teaching and ensuring that all students could access the activities, though being in lockdown. The remote courses were more than 800, with the participation of nearly 30 thousand students and the involvement of 2,000 professors and teaching staff – almost the total number of professors involved in teaching courses during the semester.
